If You Don't Use It, You Lose It Part II

By, Michael Hais

In spite of incorrect explanations like those of New York Times political columnist Matt

Bai that the election of Massachusetts Republican Scott Brown to the U.S. Senate resulted from the actions of a fickle electorate dominated by political independents, the loss by Democrats of a long-held Senate seat is really a clear example of the old adage, "If you don't use it, you lose it." That is the lesson that Democrats should draw from last week's special election. The admittedly shocking event in Massachusetts notwithstanding, during the past decade the Democratic Party has assembled a new, and potentially majority, voter coalition. If the Democrats have the awareness and courage to use that coalition in New England and elsewhere across the United States they could dominate American politics and policy making for decades to come.

According to Bai, the American electorate, represented most recently by Massachusetts voters, seems to suffer from political ADD, flitting between "the latest offer" or "the newest best deal" in a society that is constantly "hitting the reset button." But, the victory of Scott Brown was not a matter of a fickle electorate alternating between the two parties in search of something new and different, or even a change in voting preference by Massachusetts independents. Rather, the outcome of last week's special election in Massachusetts stemmed primarily from reduced voter turnout among the state's Democrats.

What happened in Massachusetts has clear implications for Democrats across the United States. Martha Coakley and her out-of-touch strategists lost touch with what Barack Obama and his creative campaign did to rally a new winning coalition in 2008 and, as a result, lost an election in a state Democrats believed they could not possibly lose. Coakley lost not because the groups in that coalition turned against Barack Obama and the Democratic Party, but because turnout among those groups fell precipitously.

If you don't use it, you lose it.

In Memoriam-Bob Johnson and Lorraine Flaherty

BOB JOHNSON

Bob joined the Party in the 1990's and was active in various campaigns, He was elected to the Executive Board for the year 2000 and elected Secretary for the 2001 year.

Bob began editing the LCDP Newsletter - "The Democratic Voice" with the Mar. 2003 issue. He continued as editor when he became Chair in Jan. 2005 and continued until he resigned in June of 2006. In addition to providing local organization information, he continually sought written comment from elected state Democrats repenting the La Crosse area or the state. He didn't like to wait until they were putting out press releases.

He typically had a lead story, usually taken off the internet from major news sources (e.g. New York Times, CNN, CBS) as well as those providing state political news. He also had pieces off the net from well known political figures or pundits such as Jim Hightower, Mark Shields, etc. Some issues would contain two or three separate pieces on different topic, For the most part it was the kind of content one would expect to find on the opinion page of most newspapers. He introduced photographs and political cartoons in the newsletter.

It was evident that he spent a fair amount of time producing each issue which always filled 6 pages. Also, he initiated an e-mail version which was identical to the hard copy version

His newsletter editing and composition exhibited considerable technical expertise which probably reflected the fact that he once considered majoring in computer science in college. At the same time the content clearly reflected the fact that he did major in political science.

LORRAINE FLAHERTY

Lorraine was an active member of League of Women Voters, the Democratic Party, and American Association of University Women. She was also involved in causes that furthered the advancement of those less fortunate. She attended the National Democratic Convention in 1964 and worked with her husband on many Democratic political campaigns.

Lorraine enjoyed travel, literature, and the French language as well as the arts - classical music, art, ballet and drama. She also enjoyed golf, tennis, fishing and swimming.

Bob and Lorraine,

You will be missed.
